Dear Beech,

I hope you have had a good week. Although the weather has turned cooler, it been good news for the plants in my outdoor planters which are growing rapidly and bursting into flower.

Have a look at the photos. Can you tell which pot was planted mainly before the lockdown (when I was able to study the mix of plants used by the garden centre in the pre-planted pots they were selling) and which one was planted since nurseries re-opened when I had to dash around and grab whatever plants were available?

When I've been trapped inside by the rain, I've been reading on my Kindle. I prefer paper books, but it's useful to be able to download books while the libraries are closed. I've been reading a children's book which only cost me 79p. It's called 'The Miraculous Journey of Edward Tulane' by Kate DiCamillo. It's the story of a self-centred china rabbit who is changed by the things that happen to him. It's a book to make you think.

Take care of yourselves and those around you, Mrs Duerden

P.S. My hair is driving me nutty! How about you?
